ABOUT US

Over the last 50 years, improvements in trauma systems of care have focused on lowering the rates of death and disability from physical injury. However, long-term recovery remains one of the most difficult parts of the post trauma journey. This is largely due to emotional wounds that need the same intensive attention as the physical wounds.

Studies have shown that a trauma patients recovery progression is linked to a focus on their emotional well-being and building social connections. In 2008, the TSN was established by the ATS as a way to connect survivors and their families by building a supportive community. The TSN focuses on connecting, educating, and empowering trauma survivors and their families, offering resources and advocacy for improved recovery.
